"I love turning exotic woods, it's so different than what I'm used to and the colours can be amazing"

LIKES

- I like explaining my work to people who are truly interested in woodturning. I don't know of anyone in my area who does it, so if I can get anyone else involved it's just another person to share it with
- The hands-on work that is involved, taking something that doesn't look like much and turning it into a piece of art. Cutting and gluing wood together in a way that is different from others and bringing your idea to life. Watching your creation come to life as it's turning is something you have to do to understand
- Sharing ideas with others, even if they don't live in the same country; putting your work on the internet to share it and also to get feedback from others. Since there are no clubs around, I have joined a Facebook page for woodturners and the people on there are amazing
- Once you start a project it's hard to stop. You just want to keep going until it's done to see your final outcome. I think once you get involved in turning it doesn't take long to get hooked and you're always challenging yourself to get better

DISLIKES

- Sanding. It just seems to never end some days; you think you got it done and then you see what you missed
- Spending the time sharpening your tools, but it is a very important part
- The pile of shavings you can make in a short time. If you notice you're getting taller as you go, you know it's time to stop and clean
- Having someone who has never used a wood lathe give you advice. I'm always open to advice, however, it's nice coming from someone who has experience
- Not having a club to share your work with

HANDY HINTS

- Just keep going until it's done. Stopping and second guessing yourself means you might just pass up on your best work
- Always help anyone who is wanting to get involved. They might not have any turning experience, but they might have something else that can help you down the road
- Make what you want to, that's what makes variety
- Always wear safety equipment
